What the session was about:

The session by Professor Harjinder Singh was an overview of knowledge itself. The session made us analyse the nature and various relationships between knowledge and other beliefs.

What I liked about the session:

- The charts and diagrams used in the session were highly informative.
- Got to learn about new perspectives from different people, and about what they believed in. The session encouraged us to think back and try answering the various questions that we took for granted previously.

What I did not like about the session:

- Nothing at all, it was a highly informative and enlightening session.

My takeaways from the session:

A deeper understanding of the interconnections and distinctions between knowledge, information, rationale, and intuition was something I learned from the session. In this day and age, it is imperative to understand and question any and all information before believing in them. Most problems in the world arise from seemingly small and insignificant misunderstandings, and these can be avoided with a critical exploration of the information we receive. The role that language plays in the conveyance of information is vital too.
